MANSFIELD, O., Aug. 23.—Mansfield won both games of the double-header to-day, Lyons' home run in the ninth being the only one made by the visitors in the first game, as they scored but three hits off Smith and Mansfield played an errorless game and pounded Fardee hard.

In the second game, Mansfield took a commanding lead in the third inning, when Flourney hit for a home run, with two men on bases. Wheeling scored one in the fifth on an error and a hit and in the sixth Congalton, who had reached first on an error, scored ahead of Poole on the latter's home run. With Wheeling at bat in the seventh, with one run scored, Meany on third and nobody out, a heavy rain came up that continued over an hour, and the game was called, the score being Mansfield 6, Wheeling 1.

KENNEDY AND COLLIER.

Great Local Interest in the Approaching Battle at the Metropolitan Club is in Evidence—Tickets Have Been Placed on Sale.

No fight within the year in Wheeling has created such general and genuine interest as the coming twenty-round contest between Eddie Kennedy, of Pittsburgh, and Frank Collier, of the crack New York fighter. Collier has a record that inspires confidence in his ability to negotiate most anything that comes out of Flitana, and it is conceded that in Kennedy he runs up against a proposition that will give some moments for anxious thought next Monday night, when the pair clash in the arena of the Metropolitan Club to the extent of twenty rounds, unless one of the pair shortens the engagement with the knock-out. Collier continues his training earnestly and faithfully every day at Gardner's place, and he has a host of the local sports who will pin their faith in the New Yorker next Monday night.

The tickets went on sale yesterday, and the indications point to a crowded house.

Kennedy has the prestige of being an unbeaten man, and this will probably make him the favorite next Monday night when the paid put up their hands. The following sketch of the Pittsburgh fighter has been furnished the Intelligencer by his manager, "Jimmy" Mason:

It is a generally admitted fact that Pittsburgh has never developed a more effective pugilist, so far as his amateur and professional record goes at this time, than Edward Kennedy, of the North Side. In the vernacular of the street "the woods are full" of alleged glove-fighters, but Kennedy is one of the very few in any class who entirely fills the bill. He is essentially a fighter, and incidentally a very clever boxer, after the fashion of the Sharkey and McGovern class of glove-men. This is revealed at the form of part of the local professionals, who prefer sparring for points to fighting for a finish. Yet the young man is as diffident and mild-mannered outside the ropes as he is aggressive and relentless in the ring, and the short order of the great majority of his contests tells the story of his slashing methods.

Young Kennedy was born with a vigorous physique, and his athletic qualities cropped out early. He got a good common school education in Manchester, and then went to work in the office of the Manchester Traction Company. During his services there in 1894 and 1896 he paid considerable attention to boxing, "for the fun of it," and subsequently, while in the employ of the Schoen Milling Company, he participated in several of the amateur boxing tournaments that cut such a figure in Pittsburgh a few years ago.

His first formidable opponent was James Lavelle, with whom he fought three battles—losing the first, drawing the second, and winning the third. This experience at the outset of his performances as an amateur, gave an index of his persistence of purpose, and the clean strain of "his" use in pugilism displays in his encounters. Then he knocked out Johnny Murphy, of the South Side, Pittsburgh, in four rounds, and at the next tournament, given by the Woods Run Escort Club, he put away Pat Maloy, of McKeesport, who at that time was rated with Jack Benoit, and the boxers of that class. This was a trying battle, but the young man won three rounds the referee ordered a fourth, and Kennedy won by knocking his man out.

James L. Mason was then conducting a gymnasium on Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, and he was impressed by Kennedy's remarkable hitting powers. Many of the wise men in such matters conveyed that the youth was no boxer, that he lacked "style," and that his courage was an unknown quantity. But Mason took charge of Kennedy, kept him busy at gymnasium work or in boxing anybody who was anywhere near the boy's class, and let the knowledge take it out in talking. In the interval Kennedy had developed into the record of a successful glove man. Pittsburgh has ever turned out, and is doubtless the most popular man among the professionals of that city.

The showing made by his established record is the best evidence of his powers, and physical prowess is always admirable, even in the eyes of those who are not big men. After the fight with those who have seen Kennedy in action, when the issues of the combat was still an open question, can understand why nobody is able to write a satisfactory description of his hurricane tactics. They are indescribable. But they always win the engagement. Since he became a professional, this is the record of his remarkable ability for fact that all but two of his battles have ended in a knock-out, and that only a few of them have been long enough to let the other fellow's friends feel that their man might have a chance. A list
